Interactive TV Case Studies

Case Study 1: StoryFormer

Example: Cook-Along Kitchen Experience

Overview
Cook-Along Kitchen Experience (CAKE) is a non-linear interactive cooking programme.

The viewer customises the recipe according to their needs, and then the presenter demonstrates with differing levels of detail depending on the viewer's responses to questions about their confidence and competence in the kitchen.

Strengths
- Viewer is able to choose between video and text content according to their needs
- Video pauses automatically, waiting for the viewer to be ready for the next step

Challenges
- All choices are set prior to the experience beginning, meaning it's not as responsive to the viewer as it could be (for example, someone may need little instruction on how to zest oranges, but more detail on how to melt chocolate in a bain marie)
- The video content is somewhat generic – it doesn't feel as if it's been made specifically for the platform.
- At the end of the experience there is no option to replay or try a different recipe

Design Constraints
In the early stages of this research, it was decided that footage from the public domain film The Cabinet of Dr Caligari would be used. While the example piece is not narrative in nature, it contains some useful lessons. Therefore, the key constraints were to tailor the content as far as possible for interactivity and to use variables and logic-gating throughout to ensure the narrative is responsive to the viewer.

Experiment
The Interactive Cabinet of Doctor Caligari was created. Initially planned in Twine, the project was then made using the BBC's StoryFormer tool, with edits in Premiere Pro.

Evaluation
The Cabinet of Dr Caligari was selected in part because the narrative was originally intended to be straightforward, but its meaning was subverted through the addition of a 'frame story' (Cardullo, 1982, p. 28). In the interactive version, both versions of the narrative may exist simultaneously.

Title cards were clipped out and replaced with subtitles within scenes to help increase pacing to something more in keeping with modern expectations, although some scenes are still somewhat slow. However, the antiquated nature of the footage was a boon in some ways – shakiness and flickering hid the joins between both edited sections and those spliced together artificially within StoryFormer.

Case Study 2: YouTube

Example: In Space with Markiplier
Overview
A first-person space adventure where the viewer role-plays as a spaceship captain. (For more on Mark Fischbach's first interactive film collaboration with YouTube, A Heist with Markiplier, see the Writing for Interactive TV Toolkit, Section 2.3.1).

Strengths
- Playable on any device with a web browser
- High quality video content
- Clearly written & produced specifically with interaction and platform in mind
- View count shows most popular route through the narrative which can inform future works

Challenges
- No variables or choice history can be used, so all plot coherence must be handled in the structure and narrative content itself (and this fails in a few places, as viewers point out in the comments)
- Viewers can easily skip content by clicking the links beneath the video – while this may be a plus for some viewers, it can cause further narrative coherence issues

Design Constraints
An export issue was found with the StoryFormer piece, which made sharing impossible. Therefore, a key requirement was for the work to be easy to share. Because of the nature of YouTube, the piece had to be branching only with no reliance on variables.

Experiment
The Interactive Cabinet of Dr Caligari was remade in YouTube using the same video clips as in Case Study 1 (with some caveats, see below).

Evaluation
While StoryFormer allows the use of video clips of any length, YouTube has a minimum length of 25 seconds in order to use End Screens, the method used for providing choices. This meant that some sections had to be artificially extended with a freeze frame or title card in order to include End Screens. For videos where the clip was less than ten seconds, Cards (clickable annotations) were used to allow viewers to skip past the freeze or title and on to the next scene.

Rethinking the narrative for branching-only meant changing some sections to have an additional choice rather than using variables to convey a contextually relevant scene. While this adds more interactivity for the user, it meant a few videos had to be altered or removed in an attempt to maintain the coherence of the narrative (although the coherence of the original film is also contested).

'The text's attempt to accommodate two contradictory readings produces a [...] small inconsistency.'

Michael Budd in Film Criticism, (1979) (4:1), p 41.

However, the process also ultimately resulted in a more stream-lined and dynamic version of the story which then fed into the structure of the final iteration (see Case Study 3).

Case Study 3: Twine (Harlowe)

Example: The Broken Rover

The player takes on the role of an investigator attempting to determine what series of events led to a rover being abandoned on an asteroid by two workers.

The story is mostly non-linear with the video content driving the player towards further content. For more on The Broken Rover and video content in Twine more generally*,* see the Writing for Interactive TV Toolkit, section 2.3.3

Strengths
- Finding new videos with the keyword system is rewarding
- Character's personalities are revealed gradually as more videos are uncovered
- Use of a database as a framing device helps hide Twine's video issues

Challenges
- No hint system – if a viewer becomes stuck or is unsure how to progress, they're on their own

Design Constraints
The key aim was to recreate StoryFormer's functionality using Twine as far as possible. This meant using variables, seamlessly moving between video clips and context-dependent content.

Experiment
The Interactive Cabinet of Dr Caligari (this time called 'Dr Caligari's Interactive Cabinet') was remade using Twine Harlowe.

Evaluation
As the project was a further rebuild it was not possible to make something as well-suited to Twine as The Broken Rover. However, the conversion to Twine was broadly successful.

The 'live' command (which delays the appearance of content) was used in conjunction with 'go-to' to run pieces of video content together, changing the pieces shown according to the viewer's previous choices and recorded variables. The pieces run together fairly seamlessly, although each time a new video starts, the control panel briefly appears at the bottom, telegraphing to the user that a new video has started (in StoryFormer, the viewer is unaware when several videos are spliced together as they run continuously with no visible change). However, even this rudimentary seamlessness relies on viewers not skipping or pausing videos as the 'live' command is not directly connected to the videos and will therefore run at the same time every time regardless of the video's position.

It is far easier to add quite intricate conditions and variables to Twine than in StoryFormer (in StoryFormer, they are not always clearly visible and it may be necessary to click through several menus to find which variables are active). The interface is also more user friendly with clickable links – in StoryFormer, choices are displayed in a drop-down menu rather than clickable buttons.

While in theory Twine works are easy to publish, the size of the video files caused issues. Even when compressed in a zip file, Itch.io would not allow html streaming due to their size. Therefore for now the piece is only downloadable.
